DESTRUCTION OF POMPEII.

Anniversary of that Disaster Duly Celebrated.

Details of the Calamity off Isle of Wight.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—A dispatch from Naples says the celebration is now being held at Pompeii to commemorate the destruction of the place 1,800 years ago. Tickets have been sent far and wide to public and scientific men. At 10 o'clock an address was delivered in the Basilica by Director Ruggieri. From 10:30 to 12:30 o'clock visits were made to the principal points.

The interest is now centered in excavation, especially undertaken for the occasion, which it is hoped will result in discoveries of sufficient importance to mark the occasion with something of extraordinary value. No festivities are permitted, and no one is admitted through the gates without a ticket.

Great Britain.

THE CALAMITY OFF ISLE OF WIGHT.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Another terrible calamity at sea has occurred. The excursion steamer Undaunted, making a trip from Ramsgate to Southampton, was run down off Isle of Wight, and her entire complement of officers, crew and passengers, one hundred in number, are said to have perished. The steamer was one of the best of the class employed in making summer excursions along the South Coast of England, starting from Ramsgate.

Her route took her past Dover, Folkestone, Beach Head, and along the beautiful and picturesque coast of Sussex. The voyage is one of the most pleasant of ordinary summer excursions, and the passengers on board on these occasions are generally well-to-do people. The steamer had made her trip with success, and without accident, until she entered the narrow arm of the sea separating the Isle of Wight from the main land. This water is always thronged with vessels coming or departing, and it was by one of these that the ill-fated excursion boat was run down.

The calamity appears to have been so sudden and complete that attempts to save the lives of any of the passengers or crew were unavailing. Much distress and agitation prevails here in consequence of the news of the accident, which is heightened by the fact that the names of the passengers are as yet unknown, and fears are felt by the friends of the numerous excursionists and visitors to Ramsgate that some of their relatives or friends may be among the lost.

Ex-U. S. Treasurer Assaults Bissell The Banker.

Special to the Star.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Ex-United States Treasurer J. C. New assaulted Col. G. P. Bissell, a prominent banker of Hartford, at the Fifth-avenue Hotel last evening. The scuffle was quickly terminated by the interference of bystanders. Bissell afterwards went to the opera, and upon his return it was noticed his face was marked only by a piece of court plaster on the bridge of his nose. New says it is a personal quarrel, growing out of a business matter connected with the sale of the Denison House, at Indianapolis, five years ago. Bissell says: "Several persons who saw the affair, commented on my cowardice, but Pliny Jewell, brother to Governor Jewell, told them that as Colonel of the Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Regiment I had already faced danger, and cowardice was not to be attributed to me. I simply did not care to be the hero of a hotel fight."

While Weston is Apparently Content to Crawl.

The American Ambles Sixty-seven Miles Behind.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Merritt, whose chance for the second place seems to be accorded by the popular voice, sleeps and eats well, and his pulse, even under the most exciting episodes, scarcely exceeds a natural beat of eighty-two.

O'Leary says the negro boy Hart will yet show his heels to the best men in America. Atkinson says he has a utmost confidence in Rowell, and is satisfied, barring accidents, that he will win the race.

One by one the pedestrians resumed their walk this morning, after a brief rest. Guyon walked lame. Merritt appeared stiff, while Kohne and Weston were improving, and doing better work.

A tough struggle was then going on all the morning between Merritt and Hazel for the second place. The Englishman has kept up a steady pace of six or seven miles an hour, gradually but surely gaining on Merritt. Guyon is suffering from a strain in the cords of his legs.
